Padraig Munro doesn't need or want an arranged marriage because he already has the perfect woman in mind. Can Padraig balance the roll of husband and son when both sides couldn't be further apart? Can Padraig put aside his preconceived notions to make his marriage work? Pushed together by royal decree, Cairren and Padraig take an instant dislike to one another. Cairren doesn't trust the man she's ordered to share a bed with, but when threats can't be ignored, she must turn to the man she'd pledged her life to.
